Who Should Fight?
The Ethics of the Draft

Thursday, December 2, 2010, 4:00-5:30 PM
Oak Lounge, Tresidder Memorial Union
Stanford University

Open to the Public - No RSVP Required

Should citizens be required to serve their country by fighting for it?
Do we think differently about the decision to go to war when only a small number of citizens will fight it?
Do volunteer armies and draft armies fight differently in combat?

Featuring:

Eliot Cohen - Strategic Studies, Johns Hopkins
Jean Bethke Elshtain - Social and Political Ethics, University of Chicago Divinity School
David Kennedy - History, Stanford
Scott Sagan (Moderator) - Political Science, Stanford

For more information: events.stanford.edu/events/247/24713/

The Ethics and War series is sponsored by: The McCoy Family Center for Ethics in Society, The Stanford Humanities Center, The Center for International Security and Cooperation (CISAC), The Stanford Creative Writing Program, The Program on Human Rights, Stanford Summer Theater, The Program on Global Justice, Stanford Continuing Studies, Taube Center for Jewish Studies, Stanford Institute for Creativity and the Arts (SiCa), The John S. Knight Fellowship Program